Collaborative Practice

SUGGESTED TRAINING AND USEFUL RESOURCES

Our shared core competencies

Introduction

The Loddon Children and Youth Area Partnership (the Partnership) has identified four competency areas that will enable workers and organisations to act in the best interests of children, young people and families:

- Understanding trauma and brain development
- Respecting culture and cultural difference
- Social inclusion
- Sharing information and integrating services: collaborative practice

The purpose of this document is to provide recommendations regarding suitable training options in the competency, sharing information and integrating services: collaborative practice. In addition to training options this paper also provides resources and information for professional development purposes.

Methodology

The Centre for Excellence in Child and Family Welfare (the Centre) conducted a mapping exercise to identify existing training through:

- an online survey of Partnership organisations
- focus groups and telephone interviews with Partnership organisations
- a desktop review of existing training packages and resources relevant to each competency
- consultation with experts in each of the four competency areas.

To capture the full spectrum of professional development tools and to assist partner organisations to choose the mode of delivery best suited to their service, we have provided a range of training courses and other resources. Providing options encourages blended learning programs that provide flexibility and cater for different learning styles. The types of training and materials included in this competency training package include face to face training, seminars, webinars and eLearning modules, amongst others.

Key findings from consultations

Consultations confirmed the importance of staff attitudes, beliefs and values to the acceptance and sustainability of professional development strategies. The main themes to emerge from interviews and focus group consultations are outlined below.

Who needs training?

Most Partnership organisations held the view that all practitioners who are in contact with children, young people and families should have at least a minimum standard of competency and training in the four competency areas. This was particularly true for trauma and brain development, and cultural awareness. However, Partnership organisations also highlighted the difficulties they face in achieving universal training with reference to cost, capacity and 'training fatigue'.

The need for training in the four competency areas also varies across locations, organisations and even different areas within the same agency, with some staff requiring little training as their role involves limited interaction with children and families. Refresher training depends on how often skills and knowledge are used in everyday practice.

How training is provided

It was generally recognised that training should have both theoretical and practical components.

Among partner agencies, training is typically delivered in the form of face to face training or workshops. Interactive workshops and experiential techniques such as case studies and role play are effective because they allow practitioners to apply knowledge and skills to practice.

It was suggested that face to face training and workshops could be delivered jointly to multiple agencies to increase efficiency and promote collaborative practice.

Mentoring or supervision programs were also suggested as a means of strengthening competency. The literature shows a range of different methods that can be used to pair a mentor with a mentee, including 'competency matching', where mentors who are proficient in a competency area are paired with mentees who are not. Mentoring could be offered as a follow up to training to ensure that knowledge and skills learned are being embedded in practice.

Making training attractive

Some agencies expressed frustration about training fatigue and a lack of employee capacity to engage with voluntary training. Employees are less likely to participate in training if it appears to be irrelevant to their everyday work. Promoting the benefits of the training program, such as how it will make their work more effective or efficient, can make the training more attractive to employees.

Selecting professional development options

Partnership organisations differ, for example, in size, culture, geographic location and in capability requirements, which means different approaches to professional development and training delivery might be needed. Financial considerations will therefore vary among agencies. While we have not included cost in the selection criteria it remains an important consideration for many organisations when choosing training packages.

Validation criteria

Training packages are based on a cycle of learning, reflection, application and review. Criteria used when determining training opportunities were:

1. The training package is underpinned by the latest available research.
2. It aligns with the goals of the organisation.
3. It is relevant to the needs of participants.
4. It is flexible in delivery.
5. It allows for reflective and active learning.
6. It applies a cultural lens.
7. It addresses legal and ethical considerations.
8. It builds on participants' existing knowledge and skills.
9. It provides opportunities for participant feedback for the purposes of continuous improvement.

Training Options

Information sharing and collaborative practice

The Area Partnership was not able to identify regularly available training options specifically about information sharing and/or collaborative practice. Consultants had been engaged by some partners to develop and deliver training specific to participants' needs. It was also recognised that, from time to time, some government departments develop specific training in response to new legislation and guidelines for specific sectors. The Area Partnership will explore this need locally.

If you can suggest training for this shared core competency or would like to participate in the development of local professional development options please contact the Loddon Area Partnership Principal Advisor.
