Introduction

The Loddon Children and Youth Area Partnership (the Partnership) has identified four competency areas that will enable workers and organisations to act in the best interests of children, young people and families:

- Understanding trauma and brain development
- Respecting culture and cultural difference
- Social inclusion
- Sharing information and integrating services (collaborative practice).

The purpose of this document is to provide recommendations regarding suitable training options in the competency, respecting culture and cultural differences. In addition to training options, this paper also provides resources and information for professional development purposes.

Methodology

The Centre for Excellence in Child and Family Welfare (the Centre) conducted a mapping exercise to identify existing training through:

- an online survey of Partnership organisations
- focus groups and telephone interviews with Partnership organisations
- a desktop review of existing training packages and resources relevant to each competency
- consultation with experts in each of the four competency areas.

To capture the full spectrum of professional development tools and to assist partner organisations to choose the mode of delivery best suited to their service, we have provided a range of training courses and other resources. Providing options encourages blended learning programs that provide flexibility and cater for different learning styles. The types of training and materials included in this competency training package include face to face training, seminars, webinars and eLearning modules, amongst others.

Key findings from consultations

Consultations confirmed the importance of staff attitudes, beliefs and values to the acceptance and sustainability of professional development strategies. The main themes to emerge from interviews and focus group consultations are outlined below.

Who needs training?

Most Partnership organisations held the view that all practitioners who are in contact with children, young people and families should have at least a minimum standard of competency and training in the four competency areas. This was particularly true for trauma and brain development and cultural awareness. However, Partnership organisations also highlighted the difficulties they face in achieving universal training with reference to cost, capacity and ‘training fatigue’.

The need for training in the four competency areas also varies across locations, organisations and even different areas within the same agency. Some staff requiring little training as their role involves limited interaction with children, young people and families. Refresher training depends on how often skills and knowledge are used in everyday practice.

How training is provided

It was generally recognised that training should have both theoretical and practical components.

Among partner agencies, training is typically delivered in the form of face to face training or workshops. Interactive workshops and experiential techniques such as case studies and role play are effective because they allow practitioners to apply knowledge and skills to practice.

It was suggested that face to face training and workshops could be delivered jointly to multiple agencies to increase efficiency and promote collaborative practice.

Mentoring or supervision programs were also suggested as a means of strengthening competency. The literature shows a range of different methods that can be used to pair a mentor with a mentee, including ‘competency matching’, where mentors who are... proficient in a competency area are paired with mentees who are not. Mentoring could be offered as a follow up to training to ensure that knowledge and skills learned are being embedded in practice.

Making training attractive

Some agencies expressed frustration about training fatigue and a lack of employee capacity to engage with voluntary training. Employees are less likely to participate in training if it appears to be irrelevant to their everyday work. Promoting the benefits of the training program, such as how it will make their work more effective or efficient, can make the training more attractive to employees.

Selecting professional development options

Partnership organisations differ, for example, in size, culture, geographic location and in capability requirements, which means different approaches to professional development and training delivery are needed. Financial considerations will therefore vary among agencies. While we have not included cost in the selection criteria it remains an important consideration for many organisations when choosing training packages.

Validation criteria

Training packages are based on a cycle of learning, reflection, application and review. Criteria used when determining training opportunities were:

1. The training package is underpinned by the latest available research.
2. It aligns with the goals of the organisation.
3. It is relevant to the needs of participants.
4. It is flexible in delivery.
5. It allows for reflective and active learning.
6. It applies a cultural lens.
7. It addresses legal and ethical considerations.
8. It builds on participants’ existing knowledge and skills.
9. It provides opportunities for participant feedback for the purposes of continuous improvement.
Suggested Training Providers

In planning your strategies to strengthen your organisation’s cultural safety it is important to consider engaging with your local traditional owners. A map of registered Aboriginal parties can be found online with Aboriginal Victoria at www.vic.gov.au/aboriginalvictoria.

If your services or activities span across boundaries of a number of traditional owners consider undertaking cultural training with each clan.

Non-local training providers will often partner with local communities in the planning and delivery of workshops. It is recommended that you discuss this at the time of requesting the training to ensure the workshop includes appropriate local content.

4. VACCHO (Victorian Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisation)

   Cultural safety training delivered in three stages:

   Pre-training: during this stage, we will create and send a unique, online Pre-Workshop Self-Reflection Activity for all participants to complete. This assists us in ascertaining the knowledge that already exists within the room and gives participants the opportunity to note any existing questions they would like addressed in our training.

   Training: during this stage, we will deliver our interactive training and provide each participant with relevant materials (including a training pack and our 60 page learner resource guide). At the end of the training, each participant will complete an evaluation.

   Post-training: during this stage, we will provide each participant who successfully completes our training with a certificate of participation. Where we deliver to a group, we will also provide the booking agency with an evaluation summary for future reference and recommendations (this summary is the collated responses of each individual evaluation).

   For information go to: Cultural safety training or www.vaccho.org.au or call the VACCHO Cultural Safety Team on 03 9411 9411.
